CART (Remote and Onsite)

Communication Access Realtime Translation (CART) is the act of listening to an event (meeting, class, seminar, training session, teleconference call) transcribing all that one hears (using a stenographic or voice recognition process) and sending that transcribed text to the user. ACS provides this text with less than a two-second delay and can deliver the full-screen of text to any location in the world that has internet access. We also provide onsite services. ACS has relationships with qualified CART writers throughout the country.

Captioning

Realtime captioning is the process by which the spoken word is transcribed and merged with a visual image. A typical example of captioning is the television news. Another use of captioning takes place in convention venues where a speaker on the stage is projected on large screens with the text flowing on the screen.

Text Interpreting

Text Interpreting (TypeWell & C-Print) is the meaning-for-meaning translation produced by a high-speed transcriber. This non-verbatim solution provides meaning without reproducing every word.

Text Interpreting is frequently used in academic environments for students who desire a meaning-for-meaning translation but find verbatim translations overwhelming.
